Web Data Mining is a relatively new and rapidly expanding area crossing the boundaries of both Computer Science and Statistics. Nonetheless, it is already being extensively applied in commercial web-based systems, and there is growing demand for innovative approaches to solve practical problems in processing the vast amount of data being generated. In the forthcoming series we hope to provide comprehensive coverage of this exciting area, which apply methods from statistics, machine learning and more broadly from computational intelligence to the web mining area.

Proposals welcomed in:
- Web usage mining and clickstream analysis.
- Web content mining, including text, audio, image and video mining.
- Web structure mining, including link mining.
- Web search, including methods for ranking and citation analysis.
- Social network analysis, including social bookmarking and tagging.
- Recommender systems and collaborative filtering.
- Opinion and sentiment mining.
- Web advertising.

Next Generation of Data-Mining Applications
MEHMED KANTARDZIC AND JOZEF ZURADA, UNIV. OF LOUISVILLE, USA
Includes twenty-five novel and diverse contributions from experienced and well-respected data mining scientists and practitioners that describe their recent applications using state-of-the-art methods and algorithms

Mining Graph Data
DIANE J. COOK, UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS, USA
LAWRENCE B. HOLDER, WASHINGTON STATE UNIVERSITY, USA
Illustrates how data mining techniques, through the application of algorithms and graphs, have been responding to the need for the collection and storage of larger, more complex volumes of data.
